

Flue Gas Recovery Devices

What are they?

Flue gas recovery devices are typically fitted in conjunction with gas-fired condensing boilers.

How do they work?

Some of the heat generated by a boiler inevitably escapes via the flue. Flue gas recovery devices recover some of this lost heat and re-use it to help heat the hot water supply.

Benefits

Makes a heating system more efficient and reduces energy bills.

What are the potential savings?

According to the Energy Saving Trust flue gas recovery devices could provide a 17% energy saving.

What are the benefits of doing this via the Green Deal?

Installing a flue gas recovery device, without the Green Deal, would typically cost the householder £650 - £1,200 up front.

This measure can be installed at no full upfront cost to the householder via the Green Deal.

Can my company install flue gas recovery devices as part of the Green Deal?

For a company to carry out energy efficiency measures as part of the Green Deal it must be a certified Green Deal Installer. The purpose of this is to provide assurance to customers that the quality of work is high and that all installations are safe.

- Green Deal Installer Certification comprises two parts:
- > An assessment of the management system used by the company.
 - > An on-site assessment of installed energy efficiency measures.

What do I need to do next?

Step 1

Apply

You can apply to become a certified Green Deal Installer by calling 0843 290 3517 or clicking on the link to the left.

Step 2

Processing your application

Once we have received your application, we will undertake some background checks to verify the information provided. We will then schedule in an assessment date as soon as possible.

Step 3

Assessment

The assessment will be undertaken at your office and on-site. At the end of the assessment you will be given feedback on the assessment visit. However, the assessor will not be able to say if you have passed or failed straight away.

Step 4

Technical review and certification decision

Your assessment will then be reviewed by a different assessor who will grant certification if you have been successful.
